

TRADITIONAL GAMES

The name of the game is "Blind Fly" (blind man's buff).

It is played outdoors.

Blind Fly is played in many countries around the world. It is a lively game. The only tool needed is a bandage.

There isn't a precise number of players and as many people as desired can play but more than three are needed.

At the beginning of the game a player is drawn by lot to be blindfolded and becomes the blind man's buff. So he/she must try to touch the other players, who meanwhile can move around freely. When the blindfold player has caught all the members, the game ends.

This game is called "Skipping with a Rope".

It is a game of movement and it is healthy. This game is usually played in parks. The equipment is very simple, just a skipping rope. It can be played individually or by a group of at least three players. In the latter case a longer rope is needed.

If there's only one player, he/she turns and jumps the rope. If there are at least three participants taking turns, two of them turn the rope while one or more jump.

This game can become a sport if it is practiced individually with commitment and perseverance.
